Overview (outline)	In the year 2000 the United States Census confirmed that our nation's population has become more diverse than ever, and that the trend is expected to continue over the next century. As our country becomes more ethnically diverse, health care systems and providers need to contemplate and respond to our patients' perspectives, values, beliefs, and behaviors about health and health care institutions. In educating case managers to understand and manage sociocultural differences, we may be able to avert significant health care consequences for the growing and diverse minority groups. With the implementation of Culturally Competent Case Management intervention, the quality of health care will help to increase accessibility to quality care for all patient populations.
